Training for Managing Advanced Parkinson's in Aged Residential Care

One hour in-house educational training session with our specialist registered nurse

Cost: $240 + GST

- It is estimated that around 12,000 New Zealander's have Parkinson's, but that number is expected to double by 2035
- Parkinson's becomes more common with age and approximately 1% of people above the age of 60 have it
- The average age of diagnosis is 59
- There is an increased risk of incidents with respite clients with Parkinson's
- People are living longer with this condition

This means you are likely to see an increasing number of residents with Parkinson's each year.

Our one hour "in-house" course provides information, guidance and tips and tricks, to help you increase well-being and manage symptoms in Parkinson's residents.

We will provide an insight into the clinical needs and care that can be provided through your team.

This training is aimed at all staff in nursing and care homes and domiciliary and home care agencies.

Attendees will gain:

- An increased understanding of advanced Parkinson's and its variety of symptoms, including motor and non-motor symptoms and medical treatments
- Tools to help someone with advanced Parkinson's to manage their condition
- An ability to identify care plan actions for your residents with Parkinson's
- An understanding of the importance of people getting their Parkinson's medication on time
- Knowledge of where to access resources and further education
- An evaluation of your own practice and care of people with Parkinson's

Staff will receive a certificate of attendance.
